

Florin Denarius

COVID-19 and Your Career

Accounting departments are one of the last departments to get downsized or laid off due to their critical function within businesses of all sorts. That being said what if the entire business/clients were out of commission due to the pandemic? While the industries around them may be impacted there will still be an overall demand for accountants because there will be other clients and businesses who will need help. An adaptive accountant should still be able to generate a sustainable income even in an environment like this or at the very least created nest egg to help them along. With the need of social distancing and health concerns, accountants are in the best position to accommodate these new needs. Much of the work accountants do is strictly done in the office which means that if need-be accountants can work from home and receive all the information needed digitally.